The video contains a video statement from an IS official discussing the group's "Center for Research and Development". He discusses the creation of the center in Wilayat al-Janub in Iraq about five or six months ago. The video has a production date of Sep. 2014. He said, "With the aid of Almighty God, we inaugurated in Wilayat al-Janub five or six months ago a department we named the 'Center for Research and Development.' In fact, we started everything from scratch and relied on people who did not have a large amount of experience, but rather put forth simple effort. We relied mainly on the enemy's leftovers. We have used some of the material used by the enemy in the military field. We have gathered and reused these materials, including the shells of bombs which never exploded as well as SPG 9 guns. We have recycled these and equipped them with military warheads. We have also used non-conventional cylinders, not the common 120mm and 180mm calibers, available in the market for the making, God willing, of mortar launchers and artillery guns such as the 126mm, 91mm, and 77mm calibers. We have also used the cylinders to produce mortar shells. Following some test-fire, we have established a launch wall platform for them. These have been used in the fighting fronts and resulted in precise hits that affected the enemy significantly."

On 2 Sep. 2014, the Islamic State's al-Furqan released a video showing the beheading of US freelance journalist Steven Sotloff. The video is similar to the James Foley execution video from 19 Aug. 2014. It begins with a statement from US President Barack Obama explaining why the US is targeting IS in Iraq. Sotloff then gives a statement in an orange jumpsuit, followed by one from his executioner who again blames the US airstrikes against IS for the execution. After his statement he beheads Sotloff. At the end of the video the IS executioner threatens to execute British journalist David Haines who appears dressed in a similar orange jumpsuit to Sotloff.
